

Use of cell phones by passengers inflight would be the worst thing that could happen to air travel. There is no proof that cellular phones do not interfere with navigation systems. Also, it would be an invitation for more aggression and assaults--something flight attendants will be expected to resolve and shouldn't have to be put in harms way. Passengers will ignore instructions from flight attendants more than they already do, using the excuse they are on the phone. If you allow this, you're asking for nothing but trouble.